The use of this Table is thus.

Finde in the Calender the age of the Moone and enter therewith the first or second columnes, so shall you see right against it in the third columnne the hour & minute of the moons meane culmination or southing to which if you adde such houres & minits as are placed at the right hand of the name of your Haven proposed, the summe shall be the time of full Sea at the said Haven.

Example

When will't be full sea at Dover the first of February? For answer, I seek the Calender, and finde the moone then 5 daies old; now against 5 in the first columnne I finde in the 3 columnne. 4 houres which added to 10.h.30.m. sheweth against Yarm: Dov: &c. amounts to 14.30. for the time of full

An explanation of the Calender.

On the head of each page you have the severall lunations which happen within the number of daies allotted to that month whose name it beareth. Under these is seven Columnes whose signification you have in the month of February respectively placed on the head of each Columnne viz.

The first Columnne gives the day of the month.

The second the day of the week.

The third Festivals.

The fourth shew the houre & minutes of sun rise, of which you may make a threefold use, that is to say

First, if you subtract the time of sun rise from 12 houres that which remains is the time of sun set.

Secondly, double the time of sun rise, and the summe is the length of the night.

Thirdly, double the time of sun set and that sum shall shew the length of the day.

The fifth Columnne is the age of the Moone whose use is shewed in the Tide Table.

The sixth Columnne sheweth what part of mans body is represented by the part of the Zodiacke under which the moon passeth, commonly called the Signe.

The seventh (as well as the rest) is plain enough.

The beginning and end of the y.
